In this the first Newsletter for 2008, the editor would again like to make an appeal to all members, students and academics in the broad field of Criminology to send in news about their Departments, new staff, projects, conference attendance workshops and any newsworthy items for inclusion in the next CRIMSA Newsletter. Contributions should not exceed 500 words.

The editor would also like to be informed when members or/and academics contribute in the media on any criminology related topic.

A short summary will suffice as well as information regarding when and where

Letters to the Editor

POST TRAUMATIC ANGER”

One of our members of the Editorial Committee of ACTA CRIMINOLOGICA, Prof. FW Winkel, has taken up the INTERVICT chair as professor of Psychological Victimology at Tilburg University, the Netherlands, on October 17, 2007.

On this occasion he has delivered an interesting lecture, titled: “Post Traumatic Anger”, Missing link in the wheel of misfortune. In this lecture, he deals with many PTSD-theories, the Resus-model and notably anger as “the other face of PTSD”. Dealing with the efficacy of therapeutic interventions on Domestic violence, divided in the “silent revolution” and PTSD and re-victimization. An elaborate list with references is added.

The lecture in full can also be accessed through the website of Intervict.

It remains to be seen if and if yes, in which way this topic is also applicable to the Southern African environment. Another challenge to our colleagues in Victimology!

Currently Prof Winkel is connected to INTERVICT (website: www.tilburguniversity.nl/intervict/) the Institute to which also the colleagues profs. Marc Groenhuijsen and Jan van Dijk belong. In record time, this Insitute has developed itself into, if I may say so, to a centre of excellence in Victimology. They are also responsible in hosting for most of the content of the Victimology website: http://www.Victimology.nl

RWANDA REVISITED

A few hours after a Falcon-jet, with the then Presidents of Rwanda and Burundi among the passengers, was shot down on approach to Kigali International Airport on 6th of April. A highly organized and pre-planned genocide started all over Rwanda. In some urban areas, the “genocidaires” were carrying computer print-outs with them, indicating which people were of Tutsi-origin and Hutu-origin. This enabled them to kill Tutsi and moderate Hutu’s only.

Till the end of the genocide on or about the 17th of July, more then 900.000 people were mercilessly killed and many women raped before their killing. Desperate attempts of the tiny UNAMIR contingent to get more outside assistance were largely ignored by UN-headquarters. As soon as 10 Belgian paratroopers, part of UNAMIR, were killed as well, while trying to protect some ministers, the Belgian government decided to withdraw the entire battalion. So called safe places, like churches during prior “pre-genocides”, were systematically used as “killing fields”

The genocide was ultimately stopped by the invading Tutsi-led RPF-forces under their then commander Paul Kagame, currently the President of Rwanda.

Situation in 1996
Just 1.5 years after the horrific genocide, I was seconded by the Dutch Ministry of Foreign Affairs, as the general and personal counselor of the Rwandan Minister of Justice to assist the Rwandan Ministry of Justice in Kigali. Capacity building of the legal system, which should include the start of the trials against the many suspects of the genocide, was supposed to be the need of the hour.

In different prisons, spread around the country, about 80.000 people were detained under almost unacceptable bad conditions. The formal capacity of the Rwandan prison-system was estimated to harbor a max. of 7000 detainees. The total number of police inspectors, prosecutors and judges, most of them hardly trained, amounted to a mere 295, not to forget a strange imbalance, because there were 113 judges, 113 Prosecutors and 70 investigators only!

Human rights groups like Amnesty International, Human Rights Watch amongst many others, rightly so, urged the Rwandan Government to speed up the legal process.

Interim

Having started with writing a sectorial policy for the Judicial Police Force, I embarked thereafter on two different exercises:

1. Co-writing a design of a Law, together with an American law professor, meant to compensate victims of the genocide, and more urgently,

2. Founding and heading a Permanent Secretariat for the start of the Genocide Trials. This required intensive traveling around the country, gathering as many data as possible, to make an inventory of human resources, infrastructures, guidelines, training of skills-programs of judges, prosecutors and investigators.

At the end of 1996, it was possible to start the first genocide trials. At the end of 1996 the first trials were started in Kigali city. In terms of fair trials, much left to be desired, notably with respect to the rights of the accused. As there were no legal counsels available, real fair trials were not to be expected. Quite understandably complaints were uttered by NGO’s, like “Avocats sans Frontieres”. This NGO proposed to “fly in” French-speaking advocates, mainly of Belgian origin, to have them stay for one month only, and in the meantime reimbursing them for “income lost” during their absence of their normal practice in Belgium! Noteworthy to remind that many Rwandans mastered Kinyarwanda only. As time passed it became abundantly clear, that genocide trials, held in the (western- oriented) legal style, would take any time longer than about 100 years or so. It was then proposed to introduce the “indigent” system of Gacaca, a legal system, which encompasses a traditional indigenous way of dealing with members of a community presided by elderly. In the beginning, it was considered to “copy” parts of the well- known South African TRC-system.

Where as the Gacaca system is in use for the last few years, and much progress has been made, it looks interesting for criminologists and victimologists, to broaden their research aim well into the Rwandan Gacaca-system. Notably for SA academics-victimologists upfront! – it can be an interesting exercise to look after elements of Retributive Justice and Restorative Justice! A much more holistic academic view on the Gacaca-system, also including highly critical remarks, can be found in A.L.Tiemessen’s contribution to the African Studies Quarterly, Volume 8, Issue 1, Fall 2004, and titled: “After Arusha: Gacaca Justice in Post-Genocide Rwanda (accessed through www.africa.ufl.edu?asq/v8/v8ia4.pdf on 7th of January 2008).

Rwanda 2007

From the 16th till the 23rd of November 2007, I was able to revisit Rwanda again. A young Rwandan student, Benjamin Karamera, which I came to know during my first posting, as a part-time judge, finalized his legal studies at the Independent University of Kigali, by defending his thesis in order to get his LLM. This public exercise was a perfect reason to revisit the country.

Interestingly was the fact that defending a thesis at this University, is a public exercise, in which even, besides professors and lecturers, also the public is given the chance to pose questions to the candidate. However, it was sad to learn that studying Criminology and/or Victimology, was not possible. Also no academic provisions were available to study genocide, leave alone the development of “early warning-systems”.

Studying and living in Kigali looks a quite interesting and almost crime-fear-free exercise. I was told by the former Prosecutor General, Jean de Dieu Mucyo, that the Gacaca trials were speeding up fast and it was foreseen that during the current year, most outstanding cases were to be dealt with.

The Asian Journal of Criminology seeks submission for volume 4 - 2009 onwards on studies of crime and criminal justice in Asia or about the impact of Asian crime groups in America, Europe and elsewhere. We are especially interested in receiving manuscripts with a comparative or empirical focus and that also address legal issues pertinent to criminal justice. The journal also invites shorter reviews or research notes. The journal publishes in both legal and Harvard style referencing format. Authors may upload directly on the Springer site and work is published online as soon as practical. Special issues on crime in the Republic of Korea, Hong Kong and Macau and Taiwan are also in preparation and authors are invited to submit accordingly.
